SEALED TEMPORARY RESTRAINING ORDER

Pending are Plaintiff Oakley's ex parte motion for a temporary restraining order and expedited discovery, as well as motion for electronic service of process against the defendants identified in Schedule A to the Amended Complaint and attached hereto (collectively, the "Defendants") and using at least the domain names identified in Schedule A (the "Defendant Domain Names") and the online marketplace accounts identified in Schedule A (the "Online Marketplace Accounts"). After reviewing the evidence filed in support of the motions, the Court grants them as explained in this Order.

Generally stated, Plaintiff alleges that that the defendants offer to sell, and do sell, counterfeit Oakley-marked products by advertising products on websites. None of the defendants are authorized to use Oakley's various trademarks (including the name "Oakley" itself and the various forms of the word-shape "O"), yet the defendants market the products with Plaintiff's trademarks on websites.

Based on the proffered evidence, including the declarations and exhibits attached to the motion, the Court grants the motion.

Plaintiff filed the motion ex parte and identified the defendants in an under-seal filing because Plaintiff's primary objective is to secure a pre-judgment restraint on any of Defendants' assets that might be within the Court's authority to freeze. At the hearing, the Court did find that Plaintiff has a near-certainty likelihood of success on liability on its trademark infringement and other claims. The facts recited above are supported by the declaration of the Manager of Global Intellectual Property Protection, Erin Lewis, who oversees IP protection for Oakley as one of her duties for its parent corporation, Luxottica Group S.p.A. The facts also are supported by the exhibits attached to the declaration and the motion documenting the defendants' trademark violations (e.g., screen-shots of the websites offering counterfeit products for sale using Plaintiff's trademarks). Furthermore, based on the evidence that the defendants' websites offered shipping of the counterfeit products to the United States, including Illinois, personal jurisdiction obstacle is sufficiently met at this very early stage of the litigation (though an adversarial presentation on jurisdiction would likely require a greater showing by Plaintiff).

The Court does express (as it has in prior similar cases filed by other trademark owners) its concerns over whether Plaintiff has adequately shown that pre-judgment restraint of all of the defendants' assets is warranted. The general test for obtaining a temporary restraining order starts with requiring the plaintiff to show that it will suffer immediate irreparable harm, has no adequate remedy at law, and its claims have a likelihood of success. Fed. R. Civ. P. 65(b)(1)(A); Girl Scouts of Manitou Council v. Girl Scouts of USA, 549 F.3d 1079, 1086-87 (7th Cir. 2008) (preliminary injunction factors). To win an ex parte TRO, the plaintiff must show that the immediate irreparable injury “will result to the movant before the adverse party can be heard in opposition” and that notice to the defendant should not be required. Fed. R. Civ. P. 65(b)(1)(A), (B). If the plaintiff can meet those requirements, then before issuing a TRO, the Court would still have to balance, on a sliding scale, the nature and degree of the plaintiff’s injury, the likelihood of prevailing, the possible injury to the defendants if the TRO is granted, and the public interest. Id. Here, the factors do weigh in favor of granting the TRO as to stopping the ongoing trademark infringement, because such infringement, as well as labeling a false designation of origin, generally are presumed to cause irreparable harm. AM General Corp. v. DaimlerChrysler Corp., 311 F.3d 796, 832 (7th Cir. 2002). And it is in the public interest to prevent the further duping of customers who believe they are buying genuine Oakley products.

But restraining assets before judgment is another matter, because federal district court’s authority to do so is circumscribed: district courts generally do not have the authority to preliminarily restrain assets where a plaintiff seeks a money judgment. Grupo Mexicano de Desarrollo v. Alliance Bond Fund, 527 U.S. 308, 331 (1999). The Supreme Court explained that courts sitting in equity traditionally did not have that expansive power, and allowing creditors to pursue prejudgment restraints would disrupt the long-standing law governing creditors and debtors:

More importantly, by adding, through judicial fiat, a new and powerful weapon to the creditor's arsenal, the new rule could radically alter the balance between debtor's and creditor's rights which has been developed over centuries through many laws-including those relating to bankruptcy, fraudulent conveyances, and preferences. Because any rational creditor would want to protect his investment, such a remedy might induce creditors to engage in a "race to the courthouse" in cases involving insolvent or near-insolvent debtors, which might prove financially fatal to the struggling debtor.

527 U.S. at 331; see also Klipsch Group, Inc. v. Big Box Store, Ltd., 2012 WL 5265727, at *5-6 (S.D.N.Y. Oct. 24, 2012). To be sure, there is an exception to the general ban on prejudgment asset restraint where an equitable remedy is sought. Grupo Mexicano, 527 U.S. at 325 (citing Deckert v. Independence Shares Corp., 311 U.S. 282, 287-88 (1940) (approving preliminary restraint where rescission and restitution sought)). And Plaintiff does seek an accounting of profits (that is, disgorgement of profits) under 15 U.S.C. § 1117(a). But an accounting of profits is not automatically awarded in lieu of actual damages, Fuller Products Co. v. Fuller Brush Co., 299 F.2d 772, 777 (7th Cir. 1962), and even where equitable relief is sought, the appropriate scope of prejudgment restraint must be limited only to what is reasonably necessary to secure the (future) equitable relief. For example, where (as here) a litigant seeks the equitable remedy of an accounting of profits, then if the amount of the profits is known, then the asset freeze should apply on to that specific amount, and no more. At this very early point in the litigation (indeed, the defendants do not yet even have notice of the suit), it is not known what will comprise the eventual equitable remedy. In other words, the asset-restraint order must be limited only to the extent that is needed to secure the equitable remedy; the scope of the exception (to the general ban on prejudgment restraint) is limited by the scope of the exception's rationale.

In light of that potential limit on the scope of the restraint, the Court remains concerned that relying on an accounting of profits to freeze assets is potentially illusory in that it is much more likely that statutory damages will be pursued and will be the basis for a judgment instead of an accounting of profits; it might be that most defendants will never file appearances in this case, let alone produce sales figures in discovery. But even if statutory damages will be, practically speaking, the more likely remedy, the fact remains that if the defendants were to file appearances and subject themselves to discovery, it is very likely that Plaintiff would win an accounting of profits. Indeed, trademark owners need only "prove defendant's sales only; defendant must prove all elements of costs or deduction claimed." 15 U.S.C. § 1117(a). So if Plaintiff can prove sales numbers either through discovery against the defendants or discovery on third-parties (for example, by serving third-party payment hosting services (such as PayPal) or financial institutions), then an accounting of profits would be appropriate. To the extent that the restraint might be too broad, the defendants may file challenges to the scope of the TRO by submitting evidence that some or all of the money has other sources. The balance of factors tips in favor of Plaintiff being able to freeze the assets of the defendants listed on Schedule A, which is filed under seal in order to allow Plaintiff time to serve financial institutions and payment hosting services with the TRO without advance warning to the defendants, who likely would seek to transfer the money elsewhere. Defendants are free to file appearances and litigate the issue.

This Court also finds that issuing this Order without notice pursuant to Rule 65(b)(1) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure is appropriate because Plaintiff has presented specific facts in the declarations supporting the motion, and accompanying evidence clearly showing that immediate and irreparable injury, loss, or damage will result to the movant before the adverse party can be heard in opposition. Specifically, in the absence of an ex parte Order, Defendants could and likely would modify registration data and content, change hosts, redirect traffic to other websites in their control, and move any assets from accounts in U.S.-based financial institutions, including PayPal accounts, to offshore accounts. Id. As other courts have recognized, proceedings against those who deliberately traffic in counterfeit merchandise are often useless if notice is given to the adverse party.

Accordingly, the TRO is granted. To provide further notice to the defendants as to the directive below, the trademarks that were allegedly infringed (the “Trademarks”) are:
